Ask Our Nutritionist

Q: I've been reading about supplements and anti-aging lately. Could you tell me more about this topic?

A: The following supplements are commonly described as antioxidants that may help counteract free radicals and reduce oxidative stress, factors often associated with aging:

Glutathione - Often noted for its role in supporting the repair of damaged cells.

Resveratrol - Commonly associated with helping reduce inflammation.

Coenzyme Q10 - Supports mitochondrial function, which is important for cellular energy production.

NMN (Nicotinamide Mononucleotide) - A form of vitamin B3 and a precursor to NAD (nicotinamide adenine dinucleotide), a molecule involved in energy metabolism and cellular repair.

LifeSeasons Stem Boost - A supplement blend containing vitamin D, green tea, spirulina, blueberry, L-carnosine, royal jelly, and brown seaweed, marketed to support stem cell renewal.

Fruits, vegetables, salads, nuts, and seeds are key components of a plant-based diet and provide polyphenols - antioxidant-rich compounds that help reduce inflammation, another contributor to aging.
