Ask The Expert

Q: I've seen a lot of attention on peptides lately. What are they and what do they do?

A: Peptides are short chains of amino acids, the building blocks of proteins, that act as messengers in the body. Peptides support skin elasticity, joint health, muscle recovery, metabolism, promote stronger hair and nails, strengthen gut balance and healthy aging. The most common way to take peptides is through high quality collagen peptides, which are available in powders and capsules. Powders blend seamlessly into your coffee/tea, smoothies, oatmeal, and baked goods without altering the taste. Capsules offer a convenient, grab and go option. With consistent use alongside proper nutrition and lifestyle habits, peptides can become a powerful addition to your wellness routine.
